

Foundations

Being a School Counselor requires me to wear multiple hats to represent multiple roles. Academic advisor, behavior specialist, and family focus facilitator just to name a few. Based on school need of course. I have enjoyed the multiple settings I have worked in so far, ranging from Title 1 schools to a Montessori style school. Not to mention the variety of age range I have worked with which is pre-K-12th grade. My perception and understanding of development and learning has grown from being in many classrooms with many age ranges of students. I am excited to enter the role of School Counselor soon and use my skills and knowledge to perform the duties and meet student needs and support the other staff at my school to promote student wellness and success.

While being mentored by my site supervisor pictured, I was able to learn more ways to advocate for the school counseling profession. By modelling appropriate school counselor behavior I can promote my program and identity. This level of professionalism is useful when advocating for student needs and promoting policy changes. Child Abuse and Neglect training is foundational to the position of being a school counselor. Behavior training is also necessary for ethical decision making with students and behavior intervention/management.
